Zoning for Low-Carbon Technologies

We want to hear from you! Join us at our upcoming community consultation meeting and help energize the conversation on City Planning's review of the zoning rules regulating renewable energy devices.

As part of the first phase of study, City Planning, in close partnership with Environment, Climate & Forestry, are proposing to modernize the zoning rules for home retrofits, renewable energy devices and other low-carbon technologies, including:

- new or updated zoning rules for ground- and building-mounted energy devices (such as heat pumps, air conditioning units, and solar energy devices) in Residential zones;
- new zoning standards for residential scale energy storage devices in Residential zones;
- technical amendments for building-mounted solar energy devices, in accordance with provincial changes to the Electricity Act;
- updates to the zoning regulations related to building over-cladding; and,
- new zoning standards for electric vehicle charging equipment and solar canopies in and around parking areas.

The amendments would support the implementation of TransformTO's goals of reducing local greenhouse gas emissions and improving our health, growing our economy, and improving social equity.
